

Compiled List of “Interested Parties” February 26, 2013 draft

The reach of pesticide safety education goes well beyond the person responsible for the purchase and handling of pesticides and container disposal. There are segments of the business community and non-governmental organizations that depend on the judicious selection and use of pesticides for the protection of human health, agricultural seeds/commodities, livestock, forests, rights of way, aquatic environments, and homes/businesses. In addition, proper handling of pesticides ensures that no unacceptable adverse effects occur in the environment from drift, runoff, leaching and volatility.

In order to develop support for any national, regional, or state-specific approach to improve PSEP funding, a wide variety of stakeholders will need to be contacted. They, in turn, can provide supporting written comments on national or state plans of action or provide direct monetary support as part of a fund-raising campaign.

This list will need to be modified to include specific state groups when focusing on state approaches. This report includes Washington State as the example of contacts; this would be modified as appropriate for each state..

Please take a few minutes and consider some of the entities that benefit from the safe use of pesticides and who could step forward to support PSEP base support. Add their names to the list.
